Need to know

Eat everything
Vietnamese food is delicious and you will want to try it all. Go ahead and buy a kilo of that strange looking purple fruit, but be aware of hygiene when you're eating street food.

Water
Don't drink tap water unless you boil it, and even then, contamination with arsenic can be an issue. Stick to bottled water. Ice is usually safe as the Vietnamese use mountains of it and there's a huge commercial ice-making industry; if the ice is cylindrical in shape, it is probably made by a commercial distributor who uses safe bottled or filtered water.

Get your hotel details
Remember to take your hotel's business card to make your return to the hotel much easier by handing it to your taxi, xe om, or cyclo driver.

Keep your phone and wallet out of sight
Violent crime is rare, but like any large city, both have their fair share of pickpockets. These thieves can be quite brazen, be very aware in Hanoi's Old Quarter and Saigon's Pham Ngu Lao.

Motorbike safety
Always wear a helmet (which is required by law anyway), avoid dangly jewellery and miniskirts, and clip your bag or store it underneath the seat of the bike to keep it safe from snatchers. Blend in with the other motorbike riders and stick to their sedate pace.

Taxis
All reputable taxi companies will start the meter as soon as you start the journey. Don't assume that your driver knows how to reach your destination, as they typically grab fares from all over the city. They also speak very little English (if at all), so it pays to write down your destination or at the very least carry a small map or a 3G smartphone with GPS capability.
